POLITICAL ACTION

Most of our working conditions are determined by the political process. By joining together as a political movement, we can stop the attacks on public workers.

CWA activists on the steps of the capitol.

"It's in our interest to support UPTE's political action fund, because change at the legislative level can make a real difference in our working lives and our students' academic lives."

Peg McCormack and John Martin, UPTE members at Butte College

What does this mean for part-time faculty at Butte, Mt. San Jacinto and College of the Sequoias?

- Support legislators who are labor-friendly and who back the changes in state law that we need to improve our working lives.
- Help to change California's educational code so that it no longer limits us to 67% "temporary" jobs.
- Support for adequate budget allocations for higher education.
- Hold members of the community college accreditation board accountable to quality education and faculty.

It has never been more critical for UPTE-CWA members to build our political strength as workers and get involved in the fight for dignity and justice.
