Weds. March 24th ,11:45am: UC Berkeley employees protest raises to UC executives awarded last week at regents' meeting; call for hiring freeze on UC administrators earning over $200,000.

The minutes from the University of California regents' meeting in Riverside on March 19, have been just released, revealing a number of UC executives who received substantial bonuses last week. Employees represented by University Professional and Technical Employees (UPTe) challenge Chancellor Birgeneau's call for a "hiring freeze" at Berkeley, and instead call for a hiring freeze on UC administrators earning over $200,000.

Press Conference at 11:45am in front of Wheeler Auditorium, preceding Chancellor Birgeneau's Town Hall with the UC Berkeley staff.

The UC regents continue to prioritize sky-rocketing salaries for their executives, rather than basic funding to keep the university providing high quality research and education.

Minutes from the regents' Committee on Compensation have just been released, revealing that 10 instances of raises and perks to top administrators earning over $200,000 have been approved since the supposed "freeze" on executive pay announced in January. Additionally, 5 new positions have been opened at the Office of the President, with administrators earning as much as $400,000 (see following page).

Meanwhile, Berkeley Chancellor Robert Birgeneau was recently quoted saying that reductions in executive pay would not be prudent because "reductions of senior administrators' salaries would make us less able to compete with other universities ... seriously damaging our ability to attract outstanding people." Birgeneau will be holding a town hall meeting with campus staff to explain his call for a hiring freeze on the Berkeley campus, reductions in staff positions, and the necessity of student fee increases.

"Reductions in staff are cuts to the education and research mission of the university", says Paul Brooks, a mass spectropist and member of University Professional and Technical Employees. "How can UC management say this is necessary when they continue to hire highly-paid executives and give raises and perks to others? They just raised student tuition last week. If it's not going to education where is it going?"

"AIG executives just announced they're giving back their bonuses" says Tanya Smith, an editor at UCB and president of UPTe Berkeley. "Why can't UC executives, who've been getting these bonuses for years, do the same thing? The regents needs to prioritize education and research not executive pay."

Explanation of terms:

"Slotting" refers to setting salary ranges for a position. "Re-slotting" refers changing the salary ranges of the position, not to the individual. "Stipends" are bonuses usually awarded to faculty who take on administrative duties. "Interim" means changes are not permanent.
