

News & views about working at LLNL & LANL

Retired University of California workers who worked at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) fought a ten year battle with the Regents of the University of California over terminating their UC health care benefits. Read more about their \$84.5 million settlement.

Another Los Alamos National Laboratory (LANL) safety failure reported. Triad lost track of 250 barrels of nuclear waste. New Mexicans need protections against errors like this!

The University Professional and Technical Employees (UPTE) local 11 is currently bargaining the Skilled Trades fourth contract at LLNL. Negotiations began in September and are ongoing. Our Skilled Trades provide highly trained services to keep the Laboratory running safely. We are fighting for equal pay for equal work; more specifically we want our Trades to be paid the same as what the Lab pays subcontractors to come in and do the same work.
